I suppose most of you have at some time or other seen the British Museum. When I was there last, I thought that even young folks brought up in London, and not able to get many enjoyable country days, might at least spend a few pleasant days there, in the rooms containing the wonderful collections of shells, butterflies, and objects of all kinds. Because, when we cannot sometimes have all we wish for, we must make the best of what we have—a secret will worth learning, especially in the 9 days of
